

BERMUDA LINERS IN ROUGH WEATHER

The Bermudian, which left Hamilton, Bermuda, Saturday, should have reached her dock here Monday morning. She did not reach Quarantine until last night and came to the pier 24 hours late. She brought back from the "Isles of the Lily and the Onion" 123 passengers, all of whom had an experience with the Atlantic they will not soon forget.

All went well with the ship until she entered the Gulf Stream Sunday. Then from the west came a light swell which soon increased to a bounding. The wind came; the waves grew in size and anger. To the officers and crew it seemed they were in the exact center of whirlpool and whirlwind. Seas as high as the crow's nest boarded the ship and tore their way from stem to stern, making the decks impassable. Snow and sleet cut into the faces of the sailors and blinded the men at the wheel and on the bridge.

The storm continued from Sunday until the ship was in sight of Atlantic Highlands yesterday. The passengers had been tossed about until they were sore and all but exhausted. Food was a thing that did not seem to bother many of the tourists and soups and coffee had generally to be taken through the neck of a bottle.

Every vessel caught in the storm suffered. The Bermudian reported that she passed the new Arcadian of the Royal Mail on her way to Bermuda and that she was tossing about as if her 600 feet of length were but six.

The Oceana, also from Bermuda, arrived to-day also twenty-four hours overdue, having been in the same weather.
